FIRESIDE STAFFING, INC CONFIDENTIALLY

The confidentiality of communication in a health / home care situation is a principal tenet of the Nursing Code of Professional Ethics. Examination, treatment, observations or conversation may gain medical or personal information. The nurse, the physician, and the health care staff, have a clear moral obligation to keep secret any information relating to a patient's illness or treatment, which is learned during the course of professional duties.

Information about patient's marital, financial and other situations should not be revealed as common gossip. Report any concerns to your immediate supervisor.

Everyone has the constitution right of privacy, whether one is ill or in good health. A deliberate and unwarranted disregard for this right of privacy gives rise to legal cause of action on the part of the aggrieved person.

It is not enough that we do a technically competent job of healing the patient's body, or providing the necessary support to remain as independents as possible, we must do an equally competent job of safe guarding his or her dignity and self esteem.
